Gene Technology Regulation in Australia

Australia's gene technology regulatory system operates as part of an integrated legislative framework. The Gene Technology Act 2000 (Cth) (the Act) and corresponding state and territory legislation form a substantial part of a nationally consistent regulatory system controlling activities involving genetically modified organisms.

This licence is issued by the Gene Technology Regulator (the Regulator) in accordance with the Act and, as applicable, corresponding State law.

In assessing applications for dealings involving the intentional release of genetically modified organisms into the Australian environment, the Regulator is required to consult with, and take into account advice from, a range of key stakeholders, including other regulatory authorities, on risks to human health and safety and to the environment.

Other agencies that also regulate genetically modified organisms or genetically modified products include Food Standards Australia New Zealand, Australian Pesticides and Veterinary Medicines Authority, Therapeutic Goods Administration, Australian Industrial Chemicals Introduction Scheme and the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Forestry. Dealings conducted under any licence issued by the Regulator may also be subject to regulation by one or more of these agencies. It is recommended that the licence holder consult the relevant agency (or agencies) about their regulatory requirements.

The licence authorises the licence holder and persons covered by the licence to conduct specified dealings with the genetically modified organism listed in Attachment A of the licence.

GMO Description

GMO covered by this licence

The GMO has viral structural genes deleted from the Venezuelan Equine Encephalitis Virus vaccine strain TC-83 to render the GMO unable to produce new viral particles and the codon-optimised glycoprotein gp85 gene from Feline Leukemia Virus (FeLV) under the control of a subgenomic promoter inserted to trigger an immune response against FeLV and protect against later infection.

Common Name: Venezuelan Equine Encephalitis Virus vaccine strain TC-83

Scientific Name: Venezuelan Equine Encephalitis Virus

Modified traits

Category: Vaccine – attenuated

Description: The GMO has been genetically modified to be replication incompetent, to be attenuated and induce an immune response against circulating FeLV, to be used as a vaccine.
